One-Point Advice for Preparing for the Nankai Trough Earthquake

7. 津波から身を守ろう Protect yourself from a tsunami

When a major earthquake occurs at sea, it causes tsunamis. According to the Japan Meteorological Agency, when an earthquake hits, its scale and location are instantly estimated, followed by the expected height of resulting tsunamis. Then, within about three minutes of the earthquake, mega-tsunami alerts, tsunami alerts or tsunami warnings are broadcast.

At this time, the expected sizes of the tsunamis are broadcast, typically with a ranking between one and five. However, in the case of major earthquakes with a magnitude of 8 or higher, the exact scale of the earthquake cannot be instantly assessed. Thus, the tsunami size is broadcast with words such as “kyodai,” or “massive,” or “takai,” “high,” along with the fact that it is an emergency situation. If the earthquake’s source is close to land, it is possible that the tsunami will strike before a warning is even issued. Start evacuating if you felt strong tremors or tremors that are long, even if they are weak. Depending on the formation of the coast, tsunamis can rise higher than predicted in certain areas. Don’t think that you’ll be safe in a given place, and simply try to get to as high a location as possible. Also, tsunamis can strike repeatedly over a long period of time. Stay in evacuation mode until after the tsunami alert has been lifted.
